Hmm.

I wonder if Wonder Woman would come to Acapulco with me....

Oh, gawd. You would not.

Climb up, jump down! It's like chocolate and peanut butter! What's not to love?

You can sit on the beach and drink things with umbrellas in them.

I'm so glad I taught you splints. You can immobilize your own broken limbs while Wabbit and I get drunk under the palapa!

Is the flying squirrel thing more dangerous than that, or less?

Considerably more so, I would guess. Less controlled environment. Ground clutter.

Good! It's nice to know there's something worse. *g*

Hang gliding's probably a lot safer than either.

ETA: And skydiving is considerably safer than hang gliding, based on the percentage of people doing it who get killed in the process. (That's skydiving with airplanes, I mean.)

Hang gliders, from what I know, tend to get killed because of pilot error. It used to be that skydivers died because of equipment failures, but now with the more maneuverable canopies, pilot error is becoming more of a factor. It's pretty easy to nail yourself into the ground while trying to do something clever to impress a girl.

Dying just doesn't leave a lasting positive impression on your date.

On the ground, however...

I want to commute to work in an ultralite. Except, of course, that metro DC's a no-fly zone, and the Air Force would shoot me down.

Well, not a lasting impression that benefits anyone.

Wingsuit BASE is actually maybe a little high-risk even for me. Maybe.

A little.

*looks mournful*

Man, I'm getting old.

It'd take me a year to get back up to speed with my tracking, anyway. I'm woefully out of practice jumping. Woe! (See? My Woe! I Showz You It!)

World-saving doesn't leave much time for other hobbies.

Sshhhhhhhh! Statute of limitations! You know the usual methods around here--you'll be tossed into a back room and made to sit under a bright swinging light until you roll on your accomplices.

(Sorry--T's been doing research for a course she's teaching next fall on the depiction of the labor movement in popular entertainment, and those noir tropes are worse than cat hair, man. *g*)

Hey, there's nothing illegal about tracking, CRW, or jumping! You got nothing on me, copper!

For instance, I have never experienced anything even slightly like this, and don't know anyone who has.

Oh, gawd, I cannot believe I'm sending this to you.

Not meant as an endorsement or enabling.

Come cook dinner this week and I'll drill you on pressure points. And how to make a traction splint from everyday household items. Suddenly I feel as if I need to step up your first aid instruction. I wonder why?

Sick. See, wingsuits.

You can also use them for skydiving, you know. Skydiving is safe. We should totally go.

Did you see this one?

What do you want for dinner, and what night do you want it? I find myself without other commitments.

Shrimp? Or salmon? Tomorrow night? Give me a list and I'll buy the ingredients.

(And watch over your shoulder, 'cause I can do raw or rubber with either of those, but the sweet spot in the middle, not so much.)

April 27 2008, 23:25:56 UTC    COLLAPSE

No big! Just slide the eyes around to the other side of the head, there... o.O

On NY video--there are New York hotels that tall with windows that open? Or do you figure they took it out of the frame? *g* Loved the cabbie asking where he'd come from.

It grandfathers to skydiving. You exit the aircraft. But yeah, it works for many levels of metaphor, doesn't it?

Even the elderly and decrepit have browsers these days. And know how to set a bookmark.

Great Caesar's ghost, what is the world coming to?

Photo taken moments before he tripped and fell over, and Miss Dog walking away snickering.

Charlie's still a high-school freshman. When he grows up, he'll be such a ladies' man. *g*

Aww. No pickin' on my littermate. Just because he's dorky.

Dorky coyotes need love too.
